The principal enclosures of the fortress

The Circular Platform is located close to the ‘Inner Temple’, suggesting not only that its political, social, and religious importance was significant but also that it served as the residence of an elite family.

The Main Temple is the site’s most important religious structure, a sacred place to which only the elite, with their control over power, had access.

The Main Entrance has a trapezoidal shape, a wall near the entrance, and stone blocks that display carvings of mythical and magical figures.

The Second Entrance leads to a delirious and may have served as an escape route and point from which offerings and sacrifices to the gods were launched.

The External Wall surrounds the complex and creates a large platform upon which the buildings of the complex were constructed. Along some sectors of the southern perimeter it reaches up to twenty meters in height.

The Third Entrance was an access point for the delivery of goods of various types needed for daily activities and for ceremonial purposes.

The Upper Town is surrounded by a wall similar to the external rampart and has three subsectors—north, central, and south—each with unique architectural features and uses.

The South Sector consists of two overlapping platforms. Here the perimeter wall reaches 11 meters, which due to the topography, is the highest point.

The Fourth Entrance is located at the end of the monument, is attached to the outer wall on one side and faces an abyss on the western side.

The North Sector, which features a tower located at the end of the monument, contains numerous (re-buried) human bone remains, an indication of the site’s sacred character.

The Taver contains filling that includes numerous (re-buried) human bone remains, an indication of the site’s sacred character.

The Circular Platform is located close to the ‘Inner Temple’, suggesting not only that its political, social, and religious importance was significant but also that it served as the residence of an elite family.

The Main Temple is the site’s most important religious structure, a sacred place to which only the elite, with their control over power, had access.

The Main Entrance has a trapezoidal shape, a wall near the entrance, and stone blocks that display carvings of mythical and magical figures.

The Second Entrance leads to a delirious and may have served as an escape route and point from which offerings and sacrifices to the gods were launched.

The External Wall surrounds the complex and creates a large platform upon which the buildings of the complex were constructed. Along some sectors of the southern perimeter it reaches up to twenty meters in height.

The Third Entrance was an access point for the delivery of goods of various types needed for daily activities and for ceremonial purposes.

The Upper Town is surrounded by a wall similar to the external rampart and has three subsectors—north, central, and south—each with unique architectural features and uses.

The South Sector consists of two overlapping platforms. Here the perimeter wall reaches 11 meters, which due to the topography, is the highest point.

The Fourth Entrance is located at the end of the monument, is attached to the outer wall on one side and faces an abyss on the western side.

The North Sector, which features a tower located at the end of the monument, contains numerous (re-buried) human bone remains, an indication of the site’s sacred character.

The Taver contains filling that includes numerous (re-buried) human bone remains, an indication of the site’s sacred character.
The historical importance of the fortress lies in the testimony it has left behind of the sturdy Chachapoyas culture which developed over nearly a millennium, allowing us to discover in detail the mysteries held by each one of the walls and the fascinating architecture.